

Caught Between Two Worlds: The Inevitability of Tragedy in Nella Larsens Quicksand

This is a student academic article which explores the position of the mixed-race female protagonist in Nella Larsens novella Quicksand in light of Barbara Christians suggestion that due to being caught between two worlds her tragic ending is inevitable. The article assumes familiarity with Quicksand, while details of the critical sources referenced are provided in the bibliography to aid further study. The article is ideal for pursuing personal interest in the issue/novella or as a means of reading widely about the novel and the position of the mixed race woman in literature if undergoing study at school or university/college.
