Excerpt: ... 105 CHAPTER VII. TORY PARTY.--PRESENT MEMBERS. SIR ROBERT PEEL MR. GOULBURN--SIR EDWARD KNATCHBULL SIR HENRY HARDINGE--SIR ROBERT INGLIS--LORD SANDON--MR. PRAED MR. C. W. W. WYNN--LORD MAHON--COLONEL SIBTHORPE--MARQUIS OF CHANDOS--MR. F. SHAW--SIR RICHARD VYVYAN. Sir Robert Peel is now, as he has been since the death of Mr. Canning, the leader of the Tory party in the House of Commons. He is a remarkably good-looking man, rather above the usual size, and finely proportioned. He is of a clear complexion, full round face, and red-haired. His usual dress is a blue surtout, a light waistcoat, and dark trowsers. He generally displays a watchchain on his breast, with a bunch of gold seals of unusually large dimensions. He can scarcely be called a dandy, and yet he sacrifices a good deal to the graces. I hardly know a public man who dresses in better taste. He is in the prime of life, being forty-seven years of age. His whole appearance indicates health. His constitution is excellent, and his temperate habits have seconded the kindly purposes of Nature. He is capable of undergoing great physical fatigue. I have known him remain in the house for three or four successive nights till one and two oclock, not only watching with the most intense anxiety the progress of important debates, but taking an active part in the proceedings, and yet be in his office, transacting business of the greatest moment, by ten oclock on the following morning. Sir Robert is possessed of business habits of the first order. He can descend, when there is a necessity for it, to the minutest circumstances in a great question, and master them all as fully as if he had never had a thought beyond the pale of such matters. He was never yet known to bungle any measure from ignorance of business ...
