

Ranjit Singh (Classic Reprint)

The following computer-generated description may contain errors and does not represent the quality of the book. In writing this sketch of the life and times of Maharaja Kanjft Singh I have made large and frequent use of my former works on the cognate subjects; The Punjab Chiefs The Rdjds of the Punjab, and The Lavj of Inheritance to Sikh Chiefships. On these books several years of my official life, and several subsequent years of such leisure as belongs to Indian officials, were employed. They contain in full detail the histories of all the great Sikh families in the Punjab proper and the Cis-Sutlej territories, of the men who were the courtiers, the advisers, and generals of the great Maharaja. There was no noble family in the province with which I was not personally acquainted, and from their records and information, as much as from official manuscripts and documents, the history of the time was compiled. It is thus obvious that I am compelled to plagiarize from myself. To Dr. Ernest Trumpp swork on the AdiGranth, I am indebted for some portion of the information contained in the Chapter on The Sikh Theocracy, and to Mr. Denzil Ibbetsons admirable Census Report of 1881, for certain statistics and deductions therefrom.
